

Elise Gard
Elisegard99
elisegard@aol.com
University of Kansas
Day 17 Greenest

Here's my inspiration Pinterest board:

I wanted to incorporate plants, candles, some of my art, photos I have of trips, lights, my favorite chair I got out of a dumpster (even though it's a perfectly good chair), my grid wall organizers I had.

Here's how my self care sanctuary turned out! Here's my reflection of the challenge which I posted on Instagram (along with the photos). I can't wait to use this space more and I'm so excited I have it set up now! It's definitely the best that I could do with what I already owned, and if I knew how to take professional photos I think it would definitely be pinterest-worthy!

pgc.eliseg99 i set up a self-care sanctuary in my room today! I had previously used this built-in desk as a spot for my tv to go, but this looks so much better!! this desk is cozy but well lit when my windows are open, and the lights provide a bit of light when it's dark out. i added a bunch of my plants because it's a subtle connection to nature and i love the green and terracotta colors. i added my marker drawers and some storage drawers with my embroidery and other art supplies. i put photos i had taken on the walls, and put my collage i made with my sister along the desk. all the elements together create such a fresh and productive workspace where i can see myself spending a lot of time and getting a lot of work done. even the chair has a tree branch design and funny enough i actually found it in a dumpster, but it's so comfy! sitting down once i completed this felt great. i usually do my work on the couch or at the kitchen table, but this space is just my own and one where i've already been spending a lot of time!

@turninggreenorg #pgc2020 @natracare

